And for Barby--oh, happy thought!--for Barby there should be the gift of a railway return ticket to go and see her widowed sister among the hills at New Year tide. Margery would keep house herself, with Rab, who would have a few days holiday, as a stand-by. Rab could clean boots, --that was a form in which the pioneer-like energy excited by the travellers tales of his boyhood had always vented itself; and Rabs love of chemistry was not above the chemistry of cooking, and learned talk sometimes went on in the kitchen over pots and pans. No, Margery did not fear the whole household burden if Rab was by; and Rab could throw a glow of romance over the...
